

It is very unconventional to not have the band's name or anything on the front of the cover because it doesn't make it clear who the album is by, although it is a very distinctive album cover and there is nothing else like it.

On the inside and back cover there is the barcode and all the songs and the band's name so there is still some show of what songs and who the album is by on the inside covers but the front cover is left plain due to the abstract picture used.

The oil spill look at the bottom of the cover working up into the little 'veins' of the cover give the cover its grimy look and make it more appealing and like a painting rather than a picture. It gives the cover a very unique look that wouldn't be able to be easily copied by another artist without it being obviously copied from this album.

The cover is very simple yet very effective as it makes the customer wonder what the album is and who it is by because it isn't clear on the cover so therefore it will attract the customer.

The abstract colouring and 'waves' of the album cover connote the bands abstract sound.
