

Is This The End Of Lana D?

Due to a recent close death in Lana D's family she has decided to take a necessary break from her music career for the foreseeable. Being the top best singer in indie pop and after just dropping her new album this will come as a shock to her fans but she is hopeful they will understand and realize what is best for her.

After the death of Lana D's sister she has been battling with her mental health, although her mental health has always been a problem for her she has noticed it has deteriorated quite drastically over the last year and more so since her sister died. Fans are concerned for the health of Lana D after only being 3 years sober from a drug addiction they are worried she may turn back to her old ways. Despite all of this Lana D has confirmed that she is still hopeful to go on her world tour in 2023 performing her new album to thousands of fans across the world whilst performing a tribute to her sister and making headlines all around, tickets are available through this magazine with the links and all the info you need at the bottom of this page for her future venues and dates.

Lana D made a recent statement to her fans on her social media platform stating "At this time in my life I feel it is best to take a break and focus on what really matters to me which is my family."

Lana has previously said how fame can have such an impact on your mental health, which is where most of her mental health problems have stemmed from which can make you not take any notice of what is happening around you and only focus on pleasing everyone else. After 10 years in the spotlight of indie pop this will be her first proper break she has had in all that time. Making it into the first 5 in the top charts when she was just 20 she got consumed by the media constantly and was always so busy that she never got any down time to spend with her loved ones.

Lana's recent loss of her sister has made her realize that not everything is about constantly pleasing other people and making sure that they are happy but it is also about focusing on things that really matter to you, Lana said she would like to focus more on her family and building better friendships with her friends around her and just enjoying life from a fresh start.

FIND US ON...

/LanaDeGrais1

@LanaDeGaris11

@LLanaDeGaris1